Improvements In Flats.

No one who hires flats and has made any changes of residence within the last few years can fail to have noticed the improvement in the fitting up of these indispensable adjuncts to life in New York city. Most of the new flat buildings in which apartments of six rooms and bath may be had at monthly rentals varying from $30 to $40 are now provided with the conveniences which in 1890 and even a year or two later were confined to the places which brought at least twice as much. This change was not due to the desire of change was not due to the desire of philanthropic landlords to increase the comfort of their tenants. The improveing law. The New York state fair for 1897 will be held during the last week in August. Boweryish, and the end is not yet.

One of the most marked changes is shown by the fact that there survives now on that historic thoroughfare only one place of amusement which is devoted to the performance of plays in English, and, in addition to being the only theater of the kind on the Bowery, it is the solitary representative of English speaking theaters devoted to regular dramatic performances below Thirteenth street. Three theaters below Canal street are devoted to performances in Yiddish, and two farther up the street are variety houses.
